The British Policy in India also witnessed changes during emergencies and other circumstances. The powers previously exerted by the Court of Directors of the Company and by the Parliamentary Board of Control passed to the British Crown by passing an act in 1858. In addition to that, the British administrators in India sensed the consequences of attempting to govern India without the wishes of the people of the country.

Morley's political protégé, who served as parliamentary undersecretary of state for India from 1910 to 1914, announced that the goal of British policy toward India would be to meet the just demands of Indians for a greater share in government. Britain seemed to be awakening to the urgency of India's political demands just as more compelling problems of European war preempted Whitehall's attention.

The British Raj (/ r ɑː dʒ /; from rāj, literally, "rule" in Sanskrit and Hindustani) was the rule by the British Crown on the Indian subcontinent from 1858 to 1947. The rule is also called Crown rule in India, or direct rule in India. The region under British control was commonly called India in contemporaneous usage, and included areas directly administered by the United Kingdom, which ...

From this beginning British power was to engulf the whole of the Indian subcontinent within a hundred years, and in the process the centre of gravity of the whole British Empire would shift from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean. The history of the British in Asia during the 18th century seems to fall into two clearly demarcated phases.
